KALAMAZOO, Mich., August 28. — Going at terrific speed, eleven of the fourteen racing automobiles hurled and smashed themselves into one grinding mass of vaporous wreckage yesterday in the 100-mile event at Recreation park an instant after the foremost car, driven by Jack Peacock of Brooklyn, jumped the track and slid in front of the rest.

Peacock's head and ribs were crushed and he died in the hospital. The head was severed completely from the body of Marion Arnold, mechanic on Andy Burt's car, which was flying next behind Peacock's.

The latter's mechanic, F. E. Marquette of Kalamazoo, was mortally injured, his head being cut and his left leg broken in three places.

The others injured are Harold W. Downs, Kalamazoo, driver, cut about face and head; Roy Newton, Kalamazoo, mechanic for Downs, cuts on

WALL-PAPER WAS

CONSTRUCTION FOREMAN TALKS

Jack Connor of Worcester Tells Very Interesting Story

"Boss," said the foreman to the contractor, as he rushed excitedly into the office, "that house you put up for Silas Jones fell down last night."

"How is that? What was the matter?" hurriedly ejaculated the contractor.

"Why, it was the mistake of the workmen—they took down the scaffolding before they put on the wall paper."

This old joke has a very, very serious side, as well as a funny one, for it goes to show the frailty with which many things are built.

The human body—that house in which we live—when it is attacked by disease is just as insecure as the house held together by wall paper.

The fibres and tissues, which compose the net work that holds the frame together, become weak and the result is many ailments, such as dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, backache, headache, constipation, stomach, liver, kidney and catarrhal ills.

Jack Connor, who is a construction foreman on the river dam for the Tennessee Power company, who lives at 10 Seymour street, Worcester, Mass., made and signed the following statement while talking to Mr. Reilly, the Tangle man at William L. Davis Co.'s drug store, Worcester. Mr. Connor said:

"I was in a rundown condition. I suffered from loss of appetite and did not have any 'pep' in me. I felt as tired when I got up in the morning as I did when I went to bed at night. I also suffered quite a little from catarrh of the head."

"I was completely off my feed; for a week I didn't put away a square meal. That wasn't natural for me, and I commenced to become worried, because I know the fellow who doesn't eat is a 'dead one.'"

"I was passing Davis' Drug Store and saw the Tangle display in the window, and bought a bottle. I hadn't taken many doses of my first bottle when I discovered that my stomach commenced to say 'I want food and plenty of it.' So now I can stare away a mighty good meal and the best part of it I am not distressed after eating it."

"I am glad to recommend Tangle because it is the very best thing I ever used in the way of a tonic and system builder. I have followed the construction game all my life, and I can tell when anything gives support, especially when a man is weak and rundown."

It is at times like these when a person is in the condition Mr. Connor was before taking Tangle, that the value of a great reconstructive tonic is most apparent. You can't amend the human constitution, but you can live up to it by taking Tangle.

In hundreds of thousands of instances Tangle has given relief throughout the United States and men and women of various walks of life have found Tangle the ideal tonic, tissue builder, appetizer and invigorant. It reaches those ills of the stomach, liver and kidneys, and catarrhal affections of the mucous membranes that "get your nerve," whether you are a merchant, an artisan, employer, employee, man or woman. The proof of Tangle is in the taking.

Allen M. Fletcher—An Appreciation

BY HOWARD L. HINDLEY

The first impression of Allen M. Fletcher is one of great mental alertness, resolution and tenacity of purpose. One gets a glimpse, through the eagle glance of steady and observant eyes, of a spirit of directness, courage, sincerity and one feels the force and possibility of the man. A few minutes' talk discloses the personal equipment of the public servant. No one can meet him without recognizing a strong and potent personality, and no one can know him without discovering the resources of a trained and useful mind.

Mr. Fletcher has been accused of the Richelieu attitude toward public service and politics. He has been credited with motives as obscure and as subtle as those of Machiavelli, but he cajoliery and conspiracy have all failed to swerve him from a fixed course. Fears for his political future, threats of public indignity, bitter personal attacks and unbridled public criticism have all been disregarded, so that he has today a set of political enemies as finely organized and as bitterly resolved to prevent his further public service as any society for reprisal in the Latin countries of Europe.

As a public official, the salient characteristics of Allen M. Fletcher are courage, diligence, thoroughness, system, shrewdness, independence, honesty and integrity. Although given to breaking into new fields and setting new precedents, no Vermonter has a higher regard for the ancient landis really a man of very direct mental attitude, with an astounding faculty for instant analysis and appraisal of men, projects or situations set before him, that is sometimes almost uncanny.

There is probably not a man in Vermont so hard to humbug or so difficult to interest in a shady or questionable project, and much of the vindictive enmity of certain men and certain interests has been due, not only to his refusal to trade, compromise or tolerate their plans, but to his prompt and effective measures to defeat them.

Set High Political Standard.

Mr. Fletcher set a very high standard in public service. He served no master but his constituents, and he had no patience whatever with men who sought to serve private as well as public interests, knowing full well that in such cases it is the public and not the private interest that suffers. Some of his summary public acts, for which he was execrated with a bitterness unparalleled in Vermont political history, were due to this impatience with double dealings in official circles.

Mr. Fletcher is somewhat of a stickler for old-fashioned moral standards and old-fashioned family life. Born himself of an old and honorable Vermont family, he is proud of its character and its identification with the history of the soil and the people. He is loyal to his friends and never forgets a service rendered or proffered in a spirit of disinterest.

His mental attitude to most ordinary affairs is one of humor, running sometimes to a cynic philosophy when the faults and follies of mankind are concerned, but truly sympathetic to the honest endeavor, tender of misfortune and tolerant of our imperfect human nature.

Admitted His Mistakes.

In his public life, Governor Fletcher made mistakes, but he was always willing to rectify them. In making a large number of public appointments, it was inevitable that he should have been mistaken sometimes. When this happened, he did not hesitate to remove the unfit and inadequate. This accounts for some very active enemies, because there is no enmity sharper than the enmity of a politician suddenly removed from the public payroll.

Mr. Fletcher is a man of considerable means and property, and after a career of strenuous effort and accomplishment would be justified in retiring to private life. In fact, the care and development of his farm properties in Windsor county would constitute a sufficiently active life for most men, but he prefers the field of public service.

Fletcher a Fighter.

"Fletcher is a fighter" has become something of an axiom in political circles and tolerant of our imperfect human nature in many decades has been readier to fight in a just cause than Allen M. Fletcher. He has not counted fighting. He has not invited enemies, but once his convictions were fixed, coercion, face and head; Thomas Ball, Coldwater, Mich., driver, back injured; Guy L. Bailey, Coldwater, mechanic for Ball, face and back injured; Jimmy Alexander, Sioux City, Ia., mechanic, badly bruised; Andy Bart, driver, Chicago, badly bruised; Otto Henning, driver, Chicago, minor injuries.

It has not been determined just what caused Peacock's machine to skid. It struck the fence at the first turn, and was pitched clear over, landing squarely across the track.

At this same track, in 1911, Oldfield's racing car dashed through the fence at top speed, and killed eight persons.

David R. Francis, ambassador to Russia, began his business career as a messenger boy on the floor of the St. Louis exchange. His boyhood ambition was to drive a stage coach.
